A new, insidious force has emerged within the contemporary art scene, described by a leading critic from traditional media outlets as a strikingly innovative phase of social-realistic abstraction.

This hidden malevolence, which can be likened to a social cancer, lurks in the shadows, subtly undermining the values of community and collaboration that are often associated with socialist ideals.

As it weaves its way through the tall grass of modern artistic expression, this phenomenon challenges the very foundations of what art should represent in society.

The critic's characterization of this movement as a bold new era suggests a significant shift in the artistic landscape, one that prioritizes individualism and detachment over the collective spirit, raising questions about the implications of such a transformation for both artists and audiences alike.

This prominent art critic, often associated with the "Old Generation," has enthusiastically yet inaccurately categorized the emerging "Doodling" art movement as the leading force and representative championing the revival of what he perceives as the "Rightful path towards restoring Democracy."

He argues that this movement possesses a unique ability to cleanse societal narratives through the unadulterated expression of truth, suggesting that the spontaneous and often whimsical nature of doodling serves as a powerful medium for conveying genuine sentiments and challenging established norms.
By positioning this art form as a catalyst for democratic ideals, he implies that it can provoke critical dialogue and inspire a collective awakening, despite the fact that his interpretation may overlook the complexities and diverse intentions behind the works produced within this movement.

The reality is that this art institution does not represent a progressive movement leading us toward a brighter future; rather, it serves as a conduit for a troubling rise in antisocial and degenerate factions, reminiscent of the now-banned Jesuits of Truth.
These groups aim to destabilize the established social order that has long maintained our peaceful and courteous community.
By brazenly disseminating a plethora of harsh and unfiltered truths, they seek to incite discord among the working-class populace, and realize they appear singularly focused on dismantling nearly ten years of our shared commitment to "Peace and Harmony."

This unsettling trend threatens to unravel the very fabric of our society, as it fosters an environment ripe for unrest and division, challenging the values that have historically united us.

A significant faction of critics and art scholars, particularly those aligned with more traditional perspectives, have openly rejected the views expressed by a particular critic regarding contemporary art.

In a recently released open letter, they assert that a vast majority of influential figures in the modern art scene share a consensus that the so-called "Doodling" Art aesthetic is merely a collection of erratic and nonsensical scribbles on paper.

This phenomenon is likened to the graffiti of previous generations, which similarly cluttered urban environments with chaotic and often meaningless expressions.

The letter specifically calls out the self-styled leader of this avant-garde movement, a figure known as the Starving Artist Formerly Known as Emil. This individual, who is a man, is noted not only for his controversial artistic stance but also for his troubling personal struggles, including a serious addiction to Red Curry Pancake Paste.

Furthermore, there are alarming reports of his mental health crises, which have led to failed interventions and the unsuccessful completion of multiple 12-step recovery programs, painting a picture of a deeply troubled artist whose work may reflect his inner turmoil rather than a legitimate artistic vision.

resist the enticing yet perilous allure of the so-called "Truth Mongers," who operate outside the bounds of our socialist principles.

It is crucial to remain vigilant against the dissemination of the officially prohibited "Doodling" Art, as engaging in such activities is not merely a trivial matter but a serious offense that could jeopardize your social standing within our society.

The repercussions of such actions may extend beyond immediate consequences, potentially leading to a detrimental impact on your social credit score, which is vital for your future

At the compliance division of the CRPH, we fully recognize that it is a natural human inclination to sometimes engage in the expression of unvarnished truths. While such candid discussions may occur in the comfort and confidentiality of one's own home, it is crucial to understand the potential repercussions of bringing these private dialogues into the public domain.

Sharing or posting these unfiltered revelations in a public setting can be deemed a significant breach of social norms and expectations, and it is imperative to approach such matters with caution and discretion.

The implications of such actions can extend beyond mere social faux pas, potentially leading to serious consequences that undermine the integrity of both the individual and the community at large.

The Committee Representing the People's Hope (CRPH) acknowledges the Supreme Court's rulings from the "Old USA Generation" that pertain to the fundamental principle of free speech. However, it is crucial to remind those who may attempt to undermine civil discourse through aggressive "Truth Mongering" that the interpretation of free speech, as outlined by Ahriman's Justice Department, does not extend to the right to be heard.

This distinction raises significant legal questions, particularly in the ongoing case within the Southern District of Ward 5's courts, which addresses the concept of "Paid" speech.

Current legal interpretations suggest that any form of speech for which the speaker receives compensation or any form of reward is not considered "Free" speech under the traditional framework of the old USA Constitution.

Consequently, such speech may fall
